Friday - 6:45 AM

Is it physically hard for her; do we need to go somewhere?

Have you talked to her about it

Then she's not okay with what you are asking?

She might not even remember details

I think her Dad did most

Well I don't want her to have to relive a horrible time

No. I think I would like to talk to mom first

We can talk after I talk to her

Without it if we can't do this process?

Not sure I get why the affidavit is so important. The act of quickly getting back nationality is evidence enough

This sounds like you are saying she is using this against you because she is mad at you. Do you mean this?
During our discussion, my mother became defensive and brought up unrelated past disagreements, stating that I do not respect her feelings as justification for her refusal to provide an affidavit.

Her refusal is a direct result of lack of respect? That makes her sound petty. She is not petty

I'm not sure I understand why an affidavit is needed. I will talk to mom sometime this weekend

Just asking about your own words Jose

I am available for about ten minutes if I want to call

I spoke with mom. If she does get comfortable with this, it's important she tells her own story. I did explain to her the two options you are faced with and that you of course do not want to rescind your American citizenship. Which I would not do either. I would just chose not to go down this road

I just want our mom to be well and not feel stressed to do something that she is not okay with. Against her will

I hope you had a good talk with mom. What you are asking of her is not easy. She needs time to process it, and to write this up. The thing that got me was your version of events with you opinion on how this is for mom and what this is for mom. It is hard to say. There is no level of trauma for her that puts her in a position to not write something. And her age does not affect her writing something. What affects her is not reaching a place where she is comfortable in her decision. This is the same for anyone. And it is magnified by the fact that this will be recorded. Her reactions are sane and sound. Your version of events paints our mother as a victim and as a traumatized individual. Anyway. I hope this resolves what you need and I mostly hope that you do not put in any legal form your version of something that is not yours to tell if she does not agree with what you are writing. She courts and she matters.

She is trying to do this for you because she knows it matters to you. But it hurts that you tell her that you will do it no matter what. She feels violated and is justified in feeling that. Please understand that.

Good luck to you.

I apologize for any snide remarks - they were not kind.

It is sometimes impossible for me to get you to understand feelings that are not and are not meant to be understood. I trust this with you and you can

Hey, give me a call when you have the chance. I've got important information about the Spanish citizenship, and I need your help with Mom on something that is very difficult for her.

Probably not, I'll send you notes
I've just drafted contemporaneous notes
And will get them notarized
Do you have a Gmail?

Contemporaneous Notes - April 4, 2025
docs.google.com

Ideally, we need an affidavit from mom about the steps she needed to take after she got married. She lost her citizenship for 7 days - her dad got angry and tried to regain her citizenship and had a judge retroactively add notes to her wedding certificate that she wanted to keep her spanish citizenship.
Anyway, we can discuss the particulars of the law... and next steps

Tired, she shut down and became angry and didn't want to talk further
She didn't want to hear any more today
Or over
Correct
She remembers all the details
Traumatic event for her
She told me things in vivid detail

Probably best we talk for about it for 5 minutes if you want to know the details and why we should have it Can I call in about 5 minutes?

I sent you notes, we can talk if you have questions

Gotta drive, running late

Please don't jump to conclusions. It was not due to lack of respect. I believe it was due to the fact that it is very painful for her to discuss

On highway
Just got to the doctor's office for my allergy shot. I can text now

The notes are what happened
she did bring past issues, including the lack of contact my adult kids have with her. I didn't respond to what she said at that point

Anyway, probably best on the phone. I can also share the process that we need to do next, I'll be sending dad's birth certificate this weekend to you. You'll then need your wedding certificate, and the three of your birth certificates

All apostilled

OK... let me walk into a conf room I just got to my office

Thank you
In a meeting right now...
